FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

City of McKinney launches “Where Can I Build That?” online tool

McKINNEY, Texas (June 13, 2016) – The City of McKinney recently launched a new interactive online mapping tool that provides quick access to information about allowed land uses and other zoning entitlements in McKinney. Residents, developers, and interested stakeholders can use this web application, dubbed the “Where Can I Build That?” tool, to get a snapshot of where specific land uses are allowed in McKinney based on a property’s current zoning district designation.

This tool provides a more efficient process for identifying land use entitlements and should decrease the time needed to answer basic questions about where certain land uses are permitted in the city.

“This user-friendly mapping tool offers a window into a subject matter that hasn’t always been easily accessible. We’re hopeful that it makes investing and developing within McKinney easier by offering a faster way to identify and research existing land use entitlements,” said Michael Quint, Executive Director of Development Services. “The Planning and IT/GIS Departments have been working diligently on this tool for some time and are excited to share it with the public.”

The “Where Can I Build That?” tool is available at www.mckinneytexas.org/whericanibuildthat.
