EXISTING CONDITIONS - KEY THEMES

Residents of East McKinney are vulnerable to displacement in several ways

· East McKinney lags the rest of the City in terms of economic and social well-being.

Home sale prices are high and have been increasing, particularly relative to household incomes, and are especially high when considered per square foot · Market pressure in East McKinney is increasingly limiting the ability for residents to move from renting into homeownership. At the same time, rents in the area are high and so the cost increase from renting into owning may not be as significant as it used to be.

Since 2010 there has been a significant shift to rental from homeownership in East McKinney, increasing the vulnerability of the population to displacement

• This shift, particularly in conjunction with other trends and factors, makes preservation and stabilization more important but also more challenging.

As the City reaches buildout of greenfield development sites, pressure will increase on infill locations

· East McKinney has a significant amount of land in and around the area, and proximity to the successful historic Downtown area is likely to fuel ongoing demand pressures.

When developers look for redevelopment opportunities, given cost differential and availability of tracts of scale, they are more likely to seek out industrial/commercial sites

· Given the availability of these sites in the East McKinney area, the desired future of these areas will be a key consideration in development of the preservation plan.
